

Allowing cell phones use in flight is asking for trouble. The public should have the right to peace and quiet while flying. Security concerns are at stake. There is the air map showing all sorts of information, and couple that with airphone use, terrorists would have a new capability available to them.

Flight attendants have enough policing concerns to contend with right now. If the FCC allows this cell phone usage in just a short period of time the traveling public most likely will get out of control, and the flight attendants will have another worry to add to their list. They might as well not do a safety demo. Half the people will be talking and the other half will not be able to hear over two conversations what the flight attendant is saying. This is just a BAD idea. Please consider the overall picture, and the safety of the traveling public. Thank you for reading this.
